As a young boy, R. K. Narayan (née Rāyan) had absolutely no use for school. "Going to school seemed to be a never-ending nuisance each day," he once wrote. Narayan much preferred spending time with his pet monkey, who liked to hang by its tail from the roof, and his pet peacock, who acted as the family watchdog. Despite his aversion to school, Narayan's family placed a high value on education. But Narayan never changed his opinion that school was too serious. Today, Narayan's stories are regularly assigned to students in schools around the world. Considering his unenthusiastic view of formal education, Narayan might have enjoyed this irony.

"I want a story to be entertaining, enjoyable, and illuminating in some way."
—R. K. Narayan

The Decision to Be a Writer Rasipuram Krishnaswami Narayan was born in Madras, India, and brought up by his grandmother. After graduating from college, he turned to fiction writing as a career. He chose to write in English, a language that he was fond of and knew well. "English is a very adaptable language. And it's so transparent it can take on the tint of any country." Narayan did not find immediate success as a writer and once said that writing "was all frustration and struggle for more than fifteen years." His first novel, Swami and Friends, was finally published in 1935 with the help of British writer Graham Greene. Narayan went on to publish numerous other works.

A Literary Voice of India Narayan is probably best known as the creator of Malgudi, a fictional South Indian village that has been called a "zany, eccentric and, at the same time, true to life world." It is the setting for almost all of Narayan's novels and short stories, including "An Astrologer's Day." Of his invented village, Narayan remarked, "Malgudi was an earth-shaking discovery for me, because I had no mind for facts and things like that, which would be necessary in writing about... any real place." Narayan's stories about Malgudi are often comic considerations of individuals trying to find peace in a turbulent world.

Critic Judith Freeman writes that Narayan "takes a Western reader into the very heart of an Indian village... The foreignness of the setting, rituals and traditions may seem to us exotic, but the underlying humanity of Narayan's dramas can't fail to strike a familiar chord."

Build Background
Astrology is a form of fortune-telling. It originated in ancient Babylonia and has been practiced in many cultures, including those of ancient Rome, Greece, India, and China. Some astrologers claim the ability to foretell an individual's future by drawing and studying a chart called a horoscope. A horoscope shows the configuration of the planets and stars at the moment of an individual's birth.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea | Matters of Life and Death
As you read "An Astrologer's Day," ask yourself, What is revealed when a man asks about his future?

 Literary Element | Mood
The mood is the overall emotional quality of a literary work. The writer's choice of language, subject matter, setting, diction, and tone all contribute to conveying a mood that helps draw the reader into the experience of the characters.

As you read, ask yourself, How does Narayan create a pensive mood that helps me relate to a time and a culture different from my own?

Reading Strategy | Analyze Cultural Context
When you analyze cultural context, you pay attention to details that reveal the setting, dress, speech, mannerisms, and behaviors characteristic of a particular culture at a particular time in history. As you read, ask yourself, What details does Narayan use to show the customs of 1940s India?

Tip: Take Notes As you read, take notes about cultural details that relate to the setting, characters, and main events in the plot.

Punctually at midday he opened his bag and spread out his professional equipment, which consisted of a dozen cowrie shells, a square piece of cloth with obscure mystic charts on it, a notebook and a bundle of palmmyra writing. His forehead was resplendent with sacred ash and vermilion, and his eyes sparkled with a sharp abnormal gleam which was really an outcome of a continual searching look for customers, but which his simple clients took to be a prophetic light and felt comforted. The power of his eyes was considerably enhanced by their position—placed as they were between the painted forehead and the dark whiskers which streamed down his cheeks: even a half-wit’s eyes would sparkle in such a setting. To crown the effect he wound a saffron-colored turban around his head. This color scheme never failed. People were attracted to him as bees are attracted to cosmos or dahlia stalks. He sat under the boughs of a spreading tamarind tree which flanked a path running through the Town Hall Park. It was a remarkable place in many ways: a surging crowd was always moving up and down this narrow road morning till night. A variety of trades and occupations was represented all along its

1. A cowrie (koo’rī) is a small snail commonly found in warm, shallow waters of the Pacific and Indian Oceans.
2. Here, obscure means “difficult to understand” and mystic means “having hidden or secret meanings.” Palmmyra (pal’mə-ra) refers to paper made from the leaves of the palmmyra tree. The man’s forehead is full of splendor (resplendent) in that it is painted with dark ash and a red pigment called vermilion.

way: medicine-sellers, sellers of stolen hardware and junk, magicians and, above all, an auctioneer of cheap cloth, who created enough din all day to attract the whole town. Next to him in vociferousness came a vendor of fried groundnuts, who gave his ware a fancy name each day, calling it Bombay Ice-Cream one day, and on the next Delhi Almond, and on the third Raja’s Delicacy, and so on and so forth, and people flocked to him. A considerable portion of this crowd dallied before the astrologer too. The astrologer transacted his business by the light of a flare which crackled and smoked up above the groundnut heap nearby. Half the enchantment of the place was due to the fact that it did not have the benefit of municipal lighting. The place was lit up by shop lights. One or two had hissing gaslights, some had naked flares stuck on poles, some were lit up by old cycle lamps and one or two, like the astrologer’s, managed without lights of their own. It was a bewildering criss-cross of light rays and moving shadows. This suited the astrologer very well, for the simple reason that he had not in the least intended to be an astrologer when he began life; and he knew no more of what was going to happen to others than he knew what was going to happen to himself next minute. He was as much a stranger to the stars as were his innocent customers. Yet he said things which pleased and astonished everyone: that was more a matter of study, practice and shrewd guesswork. All the same, it was as much an honest man’s labor as any other, and he deserved the wages he carried home at the end of a day.

He had left his village without any previous thought or plan. If he had continued there he would have carried on the work of his forefathers—namely, tilling the land, living, marrying and ripening in his cornfield and ancestral home. But that was not to be. He had to leave home without telling anyone, and he could not rest till he left it behind a couple of hundred miles. To a villager it is a great deal, as if an ocean flowed between.

He had a working analysis of mankind’s troubles: marriage, money and the tangles of human ties. Long practice had sharpened his perception. Within five minutes he understood what was wrong. He charged three pice per question and never opened his mouth till the other had spoken for at least ten minutes, which provided him enough stuff for a dozen answers and advices. When he told the person before him, gazing at his palm, “In many ways you are not getting the fullest results for your efforts,” nine out of ten were disposed to agree with him. Or he questioned: “Is there any woman in your family, maybe even a distant relative, who is not well disposed towards you?” Or he gave an analysis of character: “Most of your troubles are due to your nature. How can you be otherwise with Saturn where he is? You have an impetuous nature and a rough exterior.” This endeared him to their hearts immediately, for even the mildest of us loves to think that he has a forbidding exterior.

The nuts-vendor blew out his flare and rose to go home. This was a signal for the astrologer to bundle up too, since it left him in darkness except for a little shaft of green light which strayed in from somewhere and touched the ground before him. He picked up his cowrie shells and paraphernalia and was putting them back into his bag when the green shaft of light was blotted out; he looked up and saw a man standing before him. He sensed a possible client and said: “You look so careworn. It will do you good to sit down for a while and chat with me.” The other grumbled some vague reply. The astrologer pressed his invitation; whereupon the other thrust his palm under his nose, saying: “You call yourself an astrologer?” The astrologer felt challenged and said, tilting the other’s palm towards the green shaft of light: “Yours is a nature . . .” “Oh, stop that,” the other said. “Tell me something worthwhile. . . .”

Our friend felt piqued, “I charge only three pice per question, and what you get ought to be good enough for your money. . . .” At this the other withdrew his arm, took out an anna and flung it out to him, saying, “I have some questions to ask. If I prove you are bluffing, you must return that anna to me with interest.”

“If you find my answers satisfactory, will you give me five rupees?”

“No.”

“Or will you give me eight annas?”

“All right, provided you give me twice as much if you are wrong,” said the stranger. This pact was accepted after a little further argument. The astrologer sent up a prayer to heaven as the other lit a cheroot. The astrologer caught a glimpse of his face by the matchlight. There was a pause as cars hooted on the road, jutka drivers swore at their horses and the babble of the crowd agitated the semi-darkness of the park. The other sat down, sucking his cheroot, puffing out, sat there ruthlessly. The astrologer felt very uncomfortable. “Here, take your anna back. I am not used to such challenges. It is late for me today. . . .” He made preparations to bundle up. The other held his wrist and said, “You can’t get out of it now. You dragged me in while I was passing.” The astrologer shivered in his grip; and his voice shook and became faint. “Leave me today. I will speak to you tomorrow.” The other thrust his palm in his face and said, “Challenge is challenge. Go on.” The astrologer proceeded with his throat drying up. “There is a woman . . .”

“Stop,” said the other. “I don’t want all that. Shall I succeed in my present search or not? Answer this and go. Otherwise I will not let you go till you disgorge all your coins.” The astrologer muttered a few incantations and replied, “All right. I will speak. But will you give me a rupee if what I say is convincing? Otherwise I will not open my mouth, and you may do what you like.” After a good deal of haggling the other agreed. The astrologer said, “You were left for dead. Am I right?”

8. The anna is a former coin of India that was equal to four pice. The rupee is a coin of India (and other countries) equal to sixteen annas.

9. A cheroot (sha’rout’) is a cigar cut square at both ends.
10. A jutka (joot’ ka) is a two-wheeled, horse-drawn vehicle.
11. Here, disgorge means “to give up or hand over.”

“Ah, tell me more.”
“A knife has passed through you once?” said the astrologer.
“Good fellow!” He bared his chest to show the scar. “What else?”
“And then you were pushed into a well nearby in the field. You were left for dead.”
“I should have been dead if some passerby had not chanced to peep into the well,” exclaimed the other, overwhelmed by enthusiasm. “When shall I get at him?” he asked, clenching his fist.
“In the next world,” answered the astrologer. “He died four months ago in a far-off town. You will never see any more of him.”
The other groaned on hearing it. The astrologer proceeded.
“Guru Nayak—”
“You know my name!” the other said, taken aback.12
“As I know all other things. Guru Nayak, listen carefully to what I have to say. Your village is two days’ journey due north of this town. Take the next train and be gone. I see once again great danger to your life if you go from home.” He took out a pinch of sacred ash and held it out to him. “Rub it on your forehead and go home. Never travel southward again, and you will live to be a hundred.”
“Why should I leave home again?” the other said reflectively.13 “I was only going away now and then to look for him and to choke out his life if I met him.” He shook his head regretfully. “He has escaped my hands. I hope at least he died as he deserved.” “Yes,” said the astrologer. “He was crushed under a lorry.”14 The other looked gratified to hear it.

The place was deserted by the time the astrologer picked up his articles and put them into his bag. The green shaft was also gone, leaving the place in darkness and silence. The stranger had gone off into the night, after giving the astrologer a handful of coins.

It was nearly midnight when the astrologer reached home. His wife was waiting for him at the door and demanded an explanation. He flung the coins at her and said, “Count them. One man gave all that.”
“Twelve and a half annas,” she said, counting. She was overjoyed. “I can buy some jaggery15 and coconut tomorrow. The child has been asking for sweets for so many days now. I will prepare some nice stuff for her.”

“The swine has cheated me! He promised me a rupee,” said the astrologer. She looked up at him. “You look worried. What is wrong?”

“Nothing.”

After dinner, sitting on the pyol,16 he told her, “Do you know a great load is gone from me today? I thought I had the blood of a man on my hands all these years. That was the reason why I ran away from home, settled here and married you. He is alive.”

She gasped, “You tried to kill!”

“Yes, in our village, when I was a silly youngster. We drank, gambled and quarreled badly one day—why think of it now? Time to sleep,” he said, yawning, and stretched himself on the pyol.
